

Digital Government Summit: Creating Services Together

David Osimo
The Lisbon Council

21 April 2021

AGENDA

15.00 Introduction by David Osimo, director of research, the Lisbon Council

15.10 High level panel discussion:

- Lise Hellebø Rykkja, professor, department of administration and organisation theory, University of Bergen (TROPICO project coordinator)
- Erica Melloni, senior researcher, Istituto per la Ricerca Sociale (ENLARGE project coordinator)
- Keith Shaw, professor, department of social science, Northumbria University (COGOV project coordinator)
- Anna Triantafillou, director, ATC (Co-VAL project coordinator)

15.45 Q&A and open discussion

16.00 Second session starts with Johannes Hahn, Sandy Speicher, Kyriakos Pierrakakis

	Base registries
	API provision
	API users
	API calls per month
	Centralized service modules provided to local authorities
	Percentage of uptake of these services by local authorities

From research to policy action

COVAL

COGOV

CITADEL

TROPICO
Transforming into Open, Innovative and Collaborative Governments

ENLARGE

ENergies for Local Administrations
to Renovate Governance in Europe

- 50 partners
- 3 dashboards
- 5 games/toolkits
- 4 cases repositories
- 150 case studies
- 100+ reports

theLisboncouncil
think tank for the 21st century

The Co-Creation Compass
Interactive policy brief Issue 27/2021
Creating Public Value Together:
from Research to Action

By Jill Dixon, Erica Melloni, Leire Orue Echevarria, David Osimo, Lise Hellebo Rykkja, Keith Shaw, Line Marie Sørsdal, Anna Triantafyllou and Cristina Vasilescu

CITADEL

COGOV

COVAL

ENLARGE
ENergies for Local Administrations
to Renovate Governance in Europe

 TROPICO
Transforming into Open, Innovative
and Collaborative Governments

Modern public administrations face a wider range of challenges than in the past, from designing effective social services that help vulnerable citizens to regulating data sharing between banks and fintech startups to ensure competition and growth to mainstreaming gender policies effectively across the departments of a large public administration.¹

These very different goals have one thing in common. To be solved, they require collaboration with other entities – citizens, companies and other public administrations and departments. The buy-in of these entities is the factor determining success or failure in achieving the goals. To help resolve this problem, social scientists, researchers and students of public administration have devised several novel tools, some of which draw heavily on the most advanced management thinking of the last decade. First and foremost is co-creation – an awkward sounding word for a relatively simple idea: the notion that better services can be designed and delivered by listening to users, by creating feedback loops where their success (or failure) can be studied, by frequently innovating and iterating incremental improvements through small-scale experimentation so they can deliver large-scale learnings and by ultimately involving users themselves in designing the way these services can be made most effective and ¹ Jill Dixon is senior researcher at Northumbria University. Lise Hellebo Rykkja is professor of public administration at University of Bergen and coordinator of the Transforming into Open, Innovative and Collaborative Governments (TROPICO) project. Erica Melloni was senior researcher at Istituto per la Ricerca Sociale and coordinator of the ENergies for Local Administrations to Renovate Governance in Europe (ENLARGE) project. Leire Orue Echevarria is senior researcher at TECNALIA and coordinator of the Empowering Citizens to Transform European Public Administrations (CITADEL) project. David Osimo is director of research at the Lisbon Council. Keith Shaw is professor at Northumbria University and coordinator of the Co-Production and Co-Governance: Strategic Management, Public Value and Co-Creation in the Renewal of Public Agencies across Europe (COGOV).

